The Fund returned 1.8% in July, with strong share market performance across most regions but more mixed performance for global bond markets. The fall in the value of the New Zealand dollar also boosted Fund returns.

Share markets continued their impressive run, as a mix of ongoing AI enthusiasm and better US economic data drove positive risk sentiment. US technology shares in particular continue to perform well, with quarterly earnings results illustrating very strong demand for cloud computing and advertising. Over the month, markets got more clarity on the Trump administration's tariff policy, where deals have either been done or are close to being done. Attention is now turning toward the economic implications of tariffs for inflation and growth. On the former, US inflation data for June showed its first clear signs of direct tariff impacts, with core goods prices accelerating. We continue to monitor the evolution of US data given the implications for interest rate policy and economic growth.

Key stock picks were software company Oracle (+16.3%), German bank Commerzbank (+19.1%), Australian healthcare business CSL (+13.1%) and New Zealand property company Kiwi Property (+9.6%). Oracle benefited from very strong new business wins in its cloud business. Commerzbank continued its strong run on expectations that it will benefit from German fiscal stimulus as well as potential M&A activity. CSL benefited from improved sentiment and its relatively low valuation, while Kiwi Property has been a beneficiary of demand for high-yield, defensive stocks in New Zealand.

Looking forward, the medium-term outlook for shares remains relatively constructive with supportive economic policy in most regions (interest rates and fiscal), slowing but reasonable economic growth and strong IT spend driven by cloud services and AI. However, short-term risks are somewhat elevated given very strong share market performance, high valuations of many companies and potential negative impacts of tariffs. The strategy of the Fund remains active and focused on companies with reasonable valuations and where we have confidence in future earnings and cashflows.
