The Fund returned -0.1% in January. Share market indices in the US (+1.4%), Europe (+2.8%) and Australia (+1.8%) posted good returns. These returns were offset by a sharp rise in the value of the New Zealand dollar (+5.6% versus the US dollar) and negative returns for the NZ share market (-0.9%). Global shares benefited from continued economic growth, good company earnings results and investor enthusiasm. The rise in the NZ dollar negatively impacts unhedged offshore investments which are typically around a quarter of the Fund. The NZ dollar rose largely in response to weakness in the US dollar as markets questioned its value and stability as the global reserve currency.

Within share markets, individual company performance remains volatile with big swings in share prices as investors speculate who will be the winners and losers from AI. Top performers during the month included computer chip companies Micron (+45.4%), ASML (+31.9%) and TSMC (+8.8%). Micron is benefiting from strong demand and increased pricing for its memory chips. TSMC is the key manufacturer of high-performance computer chips (including those used in AI) and rose after a strong earnings report and outlook. Perceived AI losers included software companies, Microsoft (-11.0%), Xero (-17.8%) and Salesforce (-19.9%). In many cases we believe that the share price moves are greater than the fundamentals suggest and reduced our holding in Micron and ASML and increased our holdings in software companies including Microsoft and Salesforce.

The medium-term outlook for shares remains supported by economic policy in many countries through lower rates, increased government spending and strong investment in AI infrastructure, defence and cloud computing. Market risks include relatively high company valuations, investor exuberance and the potential for strong growth to boost inflation and interest rates. Large moves in individual company shares is creating opportunities for active investors who are prepared to focus on medium term fundamental value. The strategy of the Fund remains active and to concentrate investment into companies where we are best rewarded for risk.
