The Fund gained 2.4% in September as global share markets touched new highs. Markets were supported by the easing of the US tariff shock and the resumption of interest rate cuts in the US, fuelling optimism for continued economic growth.

Growth stocks led the way, with semiconductor companies standing out, thanks to expectations of increased AI infrastructure spending. In contrast, defensive sectors such as consumer staples and healthcare lagged.

Notable positive contributors in September included semiconductor company TSMC (+21.3%), a key beneficiary of booming demand for AI-related chips. As the world's leading chipmaker, its technological edge and scale allowed it to capture new opportunities, and we see TSMC as a cornerstone of our AI investment theme.

Software company Oracle (+24.4%), also outperformed after reporting robust third quarter earnings with a remarkable 359% increase in order backlog driven by major AI infrastructure deals, including a $300 billion contract from OpenAI. Bank of Ireland (+10.9%) extended August's strong gains, supported by accelerated loan growth and a resilient Irish economy.

Other outperformers included US broker Interactive Brokers (+10.6%) and building materials company CRH (+6.2%), which outperformed as the company, at their investor day, laid out new five-year financial targets that exceeded expectations.

Negative contributors included internet giant Amazon (-4.1%), on concerns their cloud business AWS is losing share to other cloud providers.

In Australasia, location tracking company Life360 (+14.5%), continued to make strong gains, as its user base expands both domestically and internationally, and the company is showing early success in boosting advertising revenue. Our exposure to Australian gold companies has been rewarding with Genesis Minerals (+30.6%), being a strong contributor in September.

Looking ahead, we expect elevated volatility driven by evolving trade policies and geopolitical uncertainty. We will take advantage of periods of volatility to add to high conviction ideas in our preferred themes.
