The Fund fell 1.5% (benchmark -0.6%) in January. Global share markets delivered positive but uneven returns in January with significant regional divergence and sector rotation. Japan, Europe and Emerging Markets outperformed, while the US lagged modestly. A strong NZ dollar was a headwind to returns in January. Sector leadership shifted meaningfully, with cyclical and commodity-linked sectors outperforming, while parts of technology lagged.

Positive contributors in January included US memory chip company Micron (+45.4%) as demand for memory chips accelerates causing a large shortfall in available supply. UK utility SSE plc (+11.2%), continued its strong performance, benefiting from sector rotation into defensive companies. SSE is a “picks and shovels” beneficiary of the AI boom, with its transmission business critical to connecting new power-hungry digital infrastructure in the UK. Gold producer Newmont (+12.5%), experienced an exceptionally volatile but overall positive month, reaching all-time highs, before a sharp correction in gold price in the final days dragged down Newmont’s share price with it. Other outperformers included UK utility National Grid (+10.2%) and US broker Interactive Brokers (+16.4%).

Technology, particularly software and some mega-cap growth names, underperformed as investors became more selective following strong prior-year gains. Key detractors in January included software companies Intuit (-24.5%), SAP (-18.4%) and Salesforce (-19.9%), as investors are concerned that generative AI poses a threat for traditional software as a service business models. During the month, we trimmed our exposure to software.

We added Techtronic, the global leader in power tools and owner of well-known DIY brand Ryobi and their flagship professional brand Milwaukee. Techtronic is highly innovative, with a strong pipeline of new products benefiting from the electrification trend and has potential for margin expansion overtime. We also added Swiss pharmaceutical company Sandoz, a market leader in biosimilar and generic drug manufacturing. The company has a strong pipeline of launches supporting growth and over the medium term also sees opportunities in the weight loss GLP-1 market. Finally, we also added Applied Materials, a semiconductor equipment manufacturer that is a leader in the material layering and cleaning stages of chip production. This industry is benefiting from the global AI chip sales boom and we expect to see multiple years of strong earnings growth.

Looking ahead, we expect elevated volatility driven by evolving trade policies and geopolitical uncertainty. We will take advantage of periods of volatility to add to high conviction ideas, in our preferred themes.
