In October, the Fund returned 0.4%, bringing the oneyear return to 9.2%. The Fund keeps delivering positive returns, supported by ongoing rises in asset prices.

Last month it was global shares that rallied, most notably the technology sector as investors continue to exhibit optimism around the AI theme. This sent the share prices of primary AI beneficiaries, namely semiconductor companies, higher. This benefited our positions in semiconductor companies Nvidia (+8.5%) and Micron (+33.8%). Strong earnings from technology giant Amazon also saw the shares rally 11.2% last month.

Outside of the technology sector, broad share market returns were somewhat lacklustre. For example, Australian and NZ shares were broadly unchanged on the month. But our UK positions continue to do well as lower inflation readings ignite expectations of a deeper rate cutting cycle from the Bank of England. UK bank NatWest Group (+12.0%) and utility company SSE plc (+10.0%) are just two stocks that did well for us last month.

Lower inflation also saw UK bonds rally sharply last month, benefiting the Fund as we have been invested more heavily there. US bonds have also been rallying over recent months, against our expectations as inflation remains sticky and growth is reasonable. But the US central bank sounded a lot less confident about future interest rate cuts at their meeting last month and this saw US bonds reverse from their intra-month highs.

Looking ahead, we expect global economic growth to pick up into 2026. But asset prices remain broadly elevated and so whilst the Fund remains reasonably fully invested, we are employing risk management strategies to benefit from outsize moves in either direction.
