The Fund returned 1.3% in May, bringing the one-year return to 4.7%. Fund performance continues to be driven by technology shares, as enthusiasm for companies benefiting from AI grows.

On the income side, outperformance from New Zealand and Australian bonds helped performance. Global share markets have kept rising since the lows in March, but most of this growth has come from technology stocks, where strong demand for AI is fuelling earnings growth. This was evident in the performance of Nvidia (+5.8%), Taiwan Semiconductor (+5.7%) and memory company Micron (+87.8%). Investors are also becoming more comfortable with software companies' ability to incorporate AI, with Microsoft shares rallying 10.7%.

Outside technology, share price performance was lacklustre. New Zealand and Australian shares rose only modestly. The Fund benefited from market performance through derivative exposure. In fixed income, New Zealand and Australian bonds performed better than US equivalents. This helped fund performance, as we have been increasing our exposure locally over the past few months.

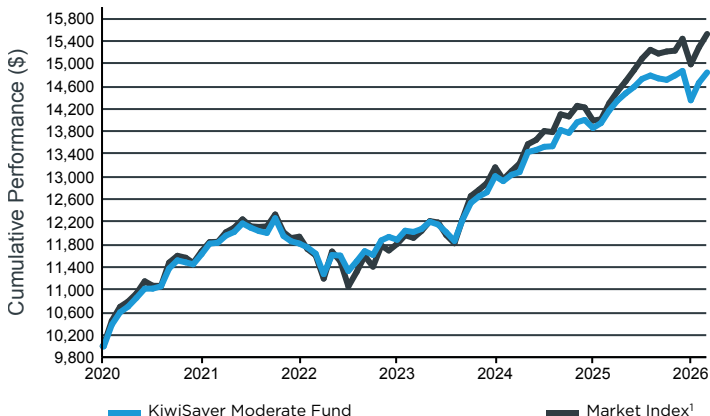

Looking ahead, we are wary of bubble-like dynamics with how quickly share prices have risen. We are putting more focus on managing risk in the fund – by keeping some exposure to capture upside moves whilst trying to cushion any downside volatility. Encouragingly, there are plenty of overlooked opportunities in shares outside of technology. Together with solid New Zealand bonds yields, we remain optimistic about returns over the medium term.
