The Fund returned 3.4% in May, which was a strong month for share markets with New Zealand, Australia and the United States rising 4.3%, 4.2% and 6.3% respectively. Share markets rose due to strong earnings results and investor optimism that tariff impacts on growth would be less material. Returns from fixed income were more subdued.

There were a number of strong performers during the month including technology companies Life360 (+51.9%), Micron (+22.8%), Intuit (+20.1%), and Microsoft (+16.7%). These companies benefited from earnings results that beat investor expectations. Life360 is an app that provides safety and location sharing and is used to track family members, devices, and coming soon, pets. The company has 83.7m users, increasing 26.6% over the year. Microsoft benefited from an increase in cloud and AI usage with its cloud services accelerating to 35% growth on the previous year. Our European bank holdings, Bank of Ireland (+17.0%) and Commerzbank (+17.4%), also performed well on optimism over European growth.

The short-term outlook for shares remains uncertain due to the impact of tariffs and their potential to slow growth and company profits. Medium-term positives for shares include the potential for increased government spending in the United States and Europe and lower interest rates in New Zealand, Australia and Europe. Risks include the prospect of higher tariffs, higher inflation and higher long-term interest rates due to increased government deficits in the US.

The strategy of the Fund is to remain active and concentrate investments where we are best rewarded for risk. The Fund is currently biased towards Europe where we see more attractive valuations, the potential for lower rates and lower risks to economic growth. The Fund also retains a bias towards shares with higher earnings certainty.
