The Fund gained 2.6% in January. Global share markets, led by technology shares, were stronger in January, backed by the prospect of lower interest rates combined with optimism that Chinese policymakers will deliver stimulus to boost the Chinese economy.

The top contributor was Meta (+10.2%), on the prospects of strong fourth quarter earnings. Payments processor Fiserv (+6.8%) was another strong contributor, as earnings expectations have been increasing driven by robust holiday spending, and strength in its faster growing businesses Clover and Carat. Ride hailing giant Uber (+6.0%), also started 2024 strongly, as both its mobility and delivery businesses have strong momentum, and profitability continues to improve. Software giant Microsoft (+5.7%) also delivered solid gains and, during the month, surpassed Apple to become the most valuable company in the world. Other strong performers included our preferred software company ServiceNow (+8.3%), US private hospital operator HCA Healthcare (+12.6%), and Amazon (+2.1%).

Negative contributors included industrial mobile computing leader Zebra Technologies (-12.4%), on caution ahead of fourth quarter earnings. Weak gas prices also weighed on the performance of energy major Shell (-4.4%).

Closer to home, Australasian shares underperformed their global peers in January. Outperformers included miner Boss Energy (+38.2%), and gas producer Santos (+3.3%). Negative contributors included lithium producer IGO (-16.5%), on weak lithium prices, and gold producer Newmont (-13.2%), after completing the takeover of Newcrest.

Looking ahead, share markets will be sensitive to the outlook for interest rates. Markets are currently pricing in aggressive rate-cutting cycles, which are possible, however a number of risks to this scenario remain. We are well diversified in our positions, so the portfolio can perform in a variety of economic scenarios.
