The weakness in bonds which capped Fund returns in January accelerated during February. Global and Australasian bond prices fell on rising market interest rates as confidence increased in the growth outlook and markets pulled forward expectations for eventual monetary policy tightening. Irrespective of (i) interest rate exposure well below long-run neutral and (ii) a predominant bond exposure to corporate bonds (which outperformed government bonds), the Fund's bonds delivered a negative return.

The move in bond yields also caused falls in many of the Fund's shares; notably Australasian income-oriented shares but it was also a headwind for many of the Fund's global growth-oriented shares. This culminated in a negative monthly Fund return of -0.8%, however it is up 4.2% over 1-year.

Looking ahead, our medium-term base case remains moderately optimistic. Reopening of economies combined with government and monetary policy support should boost activity and earnings. This may allow many company share valuations to navigate the likely rising interest rates and we are still finding attractive opportunities. Therefore, while we trimmed overall share exposure, it remains close to long run neutral. We continue to believe corporate bonds will outperform government bonds and cash over time, but we will actively manage interest rate exposure to cushion Fund returns from rising rates. In aggregate, this should underpin a moderate medium-term Fund return but we reiterate that as markets adjust to the risk of higher interest rates, (i) near-term monthly returns could be more volatile and (ii) medium-term returns may moderate relative to recent years.
