The Fund delivered 1.4% last month, bringing the one year return to 10.4%. Despite underlying markets being more volatile last month, the Fund still delivered a solid gain, propelled by some good stock selection in the global funds. Market crosswinds are picking up, including AI competition from China and threats of broad tariffs from the Trump administration. These are complicating the outlook and increasing the risks, especially set against optimistic investors and expensive shares. We are navigating this set up by looking for less risky and/or cheaper investments.

Last month, stocks such as Meta (+17.7%) and Interactive Brokers (+23.1%) were strong US performers for the Fund. Investments outside the US outperformed last month, particularly the UK market which ended up 5.9%, as well as some outperformance from our stock picks, such as NatWest Group (+7.7%) and Bank of Ireland (+9.3%). On the other hand, NZ shares were a laggard after a strong December. Bond investments were solid in January, delivering a positive return from the yields we are receiving on the bonds we own.

The Fund increased its bond exposure modestly in the month, recognising that bonds are now providing reasonable insurance against a slowing in growth or further equity volatility. Looking ahead, it is reasonable to expect ongoing volatility in shares as tariff risks wax and wane. Ultimately though, the backdrop remains one where reasonable returns can continue over the medium term.
